PROJECT-TITLE

Beethoven in Translation: Reframing the Interwar Commemorations of 1920 and 1927

PROJECT-DESCRIPTION

In contrast to literature and theater, Western art music has been cast for centuries as a universal language (or world language) eo ipso, and none more than Beethoven's. A trope already well established in the nineteenth century, transnational constructions of Beethoven as a universal genius took on a particular slant after World War I: he became a messenger of peace, whose compositions transcended borders for the greater good of humanity without any need of translation. These postwar interpretations of Beethoven were crystallized in two remarkably different commemorative moments: the celebrations of his 150th birthday in 1920 and the centenary commemorations of his death, in 1927. Focusing on these two historical moments, my project explores transnational commemorative culture from a glocal perspective by reflecting on local translations of transnationally circulating themes.
