PROJEKTTITEL

Feminism in/as Translation in Post-Communist Central and Eastern Europe

PROJEKTbeschreibung

The project explores the emergence of feminism in Central and Eastern Europe (with case studies from Bulgaria, Serbia, Romania, and the Czech Republic) during the transitional post-Communist period, when feminist ideas and practices were promoted as part of Western gender equality agendas and EU anti-discrimination policies. This is why some scholars have described this process as an imposition of Western feminism “from outside” and “from above”, or as “room-service feminism”. The project works towards theorizing it as “feminism in/as translation” by analyzing diverse feminist texts, gender theories, policies, methodologies, and practices in translation through the lens of cultural translation. In so doing, the recent feminist project can be seen not simply as an eclectic borrowing of foreign models, but as a palimpsestic culture of translation. Here, the culturally specific legacies from former socialist gender regimes mix with Western liberal ideas, triggering processes of intercultural exchange and collaboration, greater tolerance, and social transformation, as well as cultural negotiation, resistance, and re-writing of feminist knowledge.
