PROJECT TITLE

China in real time

PROJECT DESCRIPTION

China is primarily perceived through reports from news agencies and a few journalists working on the ground. Only very rarely does the public have the opportunity to listen to Chinese voices through texts translated directly from Chinese.

The project China in Real Time aims to convey a more direct image of the country through the translation of Chinese-language texts, to shed light on current developments in politics, society as well as art and culture and to show the liveliness of the debate that prevails despite the increasingly strict regulation of the public sphere. The sources are mainstream media, i.e. mouthpieces of the government and the party, social media, academic texts, but also voices from the Chinese diaspora.

The aim is not only to translate, but also to classify and comment on them and to make clear the difficulty of understanding a context that is unfamiliar to us.
